

Dunmire Diaries

The Big Day

Today was a big day at the Dunmire house. We pulled off a trifecta with all of the children going to school today. This marks the first time all are enrolled and certified school agers.

Maranda started her senior year at Dublin Scioto High School. She is taking academic classes and many art electives.

Maranda has a big year ahead of her, but is up for it. Kick butt, she will.

Zoe started the first grade in Mr. Kelly's class. This is her first year spending a full day at school.

She is excited to be a 1st grader and has been coaching her brother on how to be a good kindergartner for a few weeks now. Sometimes it is good to be the big sister.

Zoe will more than likely continue her Physical, Occupational and Speech Therapy this year, but she managed to keep her reading skills sharp during the summer thanks to the summer reading program at the library and Maranda reading with the little ones several times a week.

Henry started out very pumped up to be a kindergartner in Mrs. Letostak's class. He had a gift for her and had all his supplies packed up for his "phase in day". Dublin uses the first three days of the starting week to have 1/3 of each class start. Then, the whole class is together on the fourth day so that all have heard the rules and had a trial run.

Henry has his typical start to the school year and was warned for whistling during class time and sneaking in a toy. That's our boy!

DUNMIRE.US

Volume 1, Issue 1

August 23, 2010

